DECREEES

the establishment, for the academic years 2020-2022, of the ERASMUS MUNDUS JOINT MASTER DEGREE (post-graduate Master Course) in "ARCHITECTURE, LANDSCAPE AND ARCHAEOLOGY" jointly offered by Sapienza University of Rome (coordinating institution), National Technical University of Athens, University of Coimbra, University of Naples Federico II.

1. GOALS

The Architecture, Landscape and Archaeology Master is a European study programme for architects and archaeologists that aims at the enhancement of archaeological sites. The programme will provide advanced education to prepare highly qualified professionals in the heritage sector, and aims at transferring skills and knowledge to allow for an innovative cooperation among architects, landscape architects and archaeologists, leading to the creation of a common ground.

Cultural heritage is a complex area, requiring a collaborative interdisciplinary approach. ALA proposes a training curriculum focused on archaeological sites where topics regarding conservation, enhancement and design need to be coordinated. These experts should handle applied technologies for scientific survey and representation, and for didactic communication, they should understand the contents and the potentials of archaeological excavations and the architectural and landscape design issues, they should acquire soft skills for transversal cooperation (interdisciplinary dialogue, inter-institutional collaboration, communication capacity, teamwork, systemic views, analytical and synthetic thinking, negotiation and entrepreneurship).

The preservation and the enhancement of the past is an important resource for economic growth, employment and social cohesion, offering the perspective to revitalize urban and rural areas. European countries offer a rich and diverse mosaic of these expressions that includes material and immaterial legacies and practices. These could also represent a significant opportunity for transferring knowledge to other contexts: on the one hand the ones experiencing environmental risks and political conflicts (Asia, Africa and Middle East) on the other those that have recently developed an interest in the field of heritage for their socio-economical growth (South America).

The current need for a joint approach especially in the job market (national boards for heritage, conservation companies and architects' offices) is stressed by international agencies, such as the UNESCO. An updated training with horizontal cooperation and the most recent technical-tools for survey, monitoring, disseminating are needed. The Master offers, for these reasons, an advanced educational path designed to prepare a highly qualified professional expert in dealing with the cultural and technical complexity of the enhancement projects for archaeological areas in urban and natural contexts. It is going to operate in layered cities and territories, respecting their historical and environmental values.

Innovative aspects of the ALA EMJMD are:

- a truly international environment of study and exchange, through a fully accredited and recognized programme;
- an interdisciplinarity and integrated-Postgraduate Master Programme as the basis for a contemporary professional approach that bridges the gap between design and conservation;
- a unique study and mobility experience in some of the most outstanding archaeological sites of the world;
- contact with prominent scholars and guest lecturers as the basis of transfer of competences and knowledge;
- exposure to updated and innovative technical tools;
- interesting traineeships in the heritage sector;

2. ORGANIZATION OF TEACHING AND TRAINING ACTIVITIES

ALA programme is a post-graduate course and is entirely taught in English.

The training corresponds to 3000 hours of activity, of which at least 1000 hours dedicated to lectures, 400 hours to design studio and design workshops, 750 hours to the final thesis and 350 to traineeship. The remaining hours will be dedicated to field trips, other forms of guided study and interactive teaching. The annual study plan is divided into modules, providing subjects and topics aimed at developing a specific professional profile taking into account its constant evolution.
