1 - Aims

The Summer School "URBAN POVERTY. The praxis of planning in the unequal cities" offers an intensive training program for the acquisition of individual skills about: a) theories and the international debate on urban poverty; b) research methods and tools to understand, analyse and treat the urban poverty at the urban scale; c) techniques and strategies of valorisation of tangible and intangible, urban and architectural resources, through the recovery of identity and local development. Indeed, according to the development of inequalities at the urban scale, there is an urgent need for a better understanding of complex models of intervention against poverty within the local development frameworks and the tradition of recovery and enhancement of identities and endogenous resources. Therefore, a better understanding of the spatial dimension of poverty and the implications at the urban scale of situated inequalities, should allow to define and interpret new directions of development and multi-scale and multi-disciplinary actions on the cities and territories, through integrated projects conducted on buildings, spaces and with resident populations.
